

Bugging in Britain

LONDON—A British security expert said he had seen evidence that Labor Party headquarters was bugged during most of 1972 when the party was in opposition.

Ralph Matthews, head of a company of business security advisers, said at a conference on security problems that he had reported his findings to the Labor Party.

A spokesman said party leaders had no knowledge of the reported espionage but would investigate the report.

Pub 10-4-74